

AI RESKILLING REVOLUTION

This session focuses on strategies and solutions to address the TOP challenge confronting modern organizations: developing new skills to match the rapid evolution of new technologies.

Corporate leaders cannot possibly steer the enterprises of the future with the skillsets of the past—particularly given that the half-life of relevant skills is now less than 5 years, and plummets to 2.5 years in the tech sphere.

Perhaps more striking, skills must be CONSTANTLY refreshed since 85% of the jobs in 2030 . . . do not yet exist.

AI, Automation, and Quantum technologies show no signs of slowing down (just the opposite), and the implications are MASSIVE. By 2025, 50% of all employees will need to undergo reskilling, a figure that could swell to 90% of the global working population by 2030. And the cost of neglecting this paradigm shift could lead to a $15 trillion deficit in global GDP.

The imperative is clear: organizations must invest as much in talent as they do in technology. Because the gravest threat is not that technology will render us redundant, but that our capabilities will grow obsolete.

Employers must step up as the new educators. Companies have to create cultures of continuous learning (and curiosity!). Leadership needs to prioritize skills as a core to competitive strategy. And organizations should nurture not only digital literacy—but also the “human-centric” soft skills of adaptability, creativity, and emotional intelligence.

All told, in this age of extreme acceleration, the factor most critical for success won't be digital . . . it will be uniquely human. So bring in CK to motivate your audiences to meet this historic moment.
