In this engaging session audiences learn how Spatial Media—a trio of Extended Reality (XR) technologies across virtual-, augmented-, and mixed-reality—will inspire the next generation of killer experiences.

We are at the dawn of a new computing platform that extends and enhances the reality that we encounter: whether we are online, offline, or in-between the two worlds.

These visual, spatial, and immersive technologies are blurring boundaries and overlapping worlds. And these media will power the next generation of killer experiences across all of our environments: be it on the Internet, out in the real-world “Outernet,” across a “Mirrorworld” of digital twins, or deep within The Metaverse.

Through Augmented Reality (AR) we can turn the air all around us into a personalized, contextualized form of media. With Virtual Reality (VR) we move from static 2D Websites to 3D Worlds.

And via Mixed Reality (MR), we combine the best elements of both AR and VR to create a fusion of real and virtual elements. So instead of computing in cyberspace, we will compute in physical space.

The value of these tech is exponential. And the business applications are endless. But what truly makes these media so powerful is that they remove the limitations, barriers, and obstacles of the natural and virtual worlds . . . and leave us limited only by our imaginations.
